Asset management in government departments is crucial for effective use of funds and efficient management of public assets. This involves strategic planning, inventory management, and evaluation of assets to ensure that they are used in the most productive manner. The full cost of an asset to the department includes amounts that are paid to local government over municipal assets. In some cases, local government initiatives in cities in the U.S. have aimed to ensure that tax-foreclosed property is sold or developed in a strategic manner.

One such strategy is the development of land banks—public authorities created to manage surplus properties. Land banks can be a vehicle for managing and real estate agencies, the Land Clearance for Real Estate.
